FAVORITE SONS

AND POLITICAL DISTURBERS.

William A. Magee, former Mayor of Pittsburgh and president of the Pennsylvania Public Service Commission, has broken into print to find fault with the leadership of Senator Penrose. Republicans generally will not regard his pronouncements as having good taste at this time. Whatever leadership Senator Penrose has and exercises in the state just now has been most emphatically endorsed by his party in the vote electing him United States Senator.

Furthermore and more to the point, the Republicans of Pennsylvania and the country approach the great struggle of 1916 with an earnest desire for unity and success, and they will have little patience with disturbers of the peace, especially small disturbers who lift their puny voices in a poor cause. It is well known that Governor Brumbaugh has ambitions and one of them is said to be a desire to be named as Pennsylvania's favorite son in the coming Republican National Convention. A mention of Senator Penrose in this connection was made but a few days before the deliverance of Congressman Magee. The inference seems plain.

Pennsylvania will hardly be permitted to name the Republican candidate for President. She is too largely and certainly Republican on national issues. But it will be her own fault if she does not have a proper hand in naming the choice of the convention. Whether her voice will be more certainly felt through a candidate of her own or otherwise is thus discussed by the Washington Observer:

"With the presidential primary prevailing here and there in spots over the United States the favorite son is not likely to be as favorite as he has been and yet he has his uses, valuable ones at that, and perhaps no more so in a Republican National Convention than in our own state. It is proper that the state raising the second highest number of electoral votes and the biggest block surely Republican should have a considerable say in naming the candidate yet the very size and sureness of its vote militates most strongly against the candidate finally selected being a Pennsylvania man. Delegates instructed for a Governor or a Senator does not necessarily imply that it is the will of the voters that the man so named be chosen in preference to all others. With no favorite sons in the field Pennsylvania might instruct for Hurston or Weeks and the course of affairs in the convention develop the fact that a winner might have been made. It is easier for a delegation at a critical point, if it seems the part of wisdom for it to throw its strength to a candidate for which it is not instructed, to switch from a man who has been endorsed for favorite son reasons than from one whose choice must be presumed to have been made for reasons of national rather than state policy. Pennsylvania will do well to send her delegates instructed for a Pennsylvania man or in default thereof unbound. To lessen her influence in the convention by doing otherwise would be impolitic if not actually quibbling."

In the meantime all ambitious politicians will do well to remember that the Republican party is going to have peace this year, and if anybody thinks other, wise and tries to start something, either in Pennsylvania or elsewhere, he will find himself elected to the speaker.

A GRACEFUL RETREAT.

"Our contemporary either wilfully or stupidly misunderstands," says the Connelville News. "We had no thought of connecting the numerous divorce decrees of Fayette county with the political propaganda exploited by the bench."

After some further discussion of the practice of the courts in granting divorces on the reports of masters appointed to take the testimony our contemporary breaks forth again and says:

"The News stated that, being so case-hardened as to the matter of political pledges, our contemporary practically admitted itself to be, perhaps the court was inclined to view all pledges and promises in the same light."

If we understand the English of this it means that The Courier and the Fayette county judges are intensely Republican and that they do not consequently believe in either platform pledges or other promises. We are free to say that if our contemporary had any thought of connecting the divorce courts with politics it has not been a brilliant success, and we are not surprised that it withdraws the inference, which, however, was fair.

We would furthermore suggest that the sanctity of platform pledges is an embarrassing subject for a Democratic newspaper to discuss.

COOKS.

Some cooks are born, but most cooks are made, and even a born cook never ceases learning how to cook. The Courier's Better Food and Better Lunies lectures in cooking this week will demonstrate these facts. They will witness the attendance of maids who know nothing about cooking, cooks who are made and cooks who were born cooks.

The culinary art is not to be despised.

of women. Some of the stronger-minded ones may affect to be above its pots and pans, but the average woman remembers that "the way to a man's heart is through his stomach." Cooking is not only a necessary accomplishment of women, but its higher development is a crowning jewel in their matrimonial attractions. A man may be able to keep a household and employ a number of servants, but his housekeeping will be more or less of a failure if his wife isn't a good manager and especially a good cook.

The efforts of The Courier to elevate this branch of domestic science in Connelville will find present indications be highly appreciated by the ladies, and we have reason to think that the men will appreciate them later.

NATIONAL SUFFRAGE.

The Women Suffragists will appeal to the Congress. The President has already said that the question is one for the states to determine each for itself and a careful reading of the Constitution ought to convince one of the truth of this statement. The Congress has never attempted to regulate the right of suffrage. The Constitution is silent on the subject but for the amendment adopted erasing the color line.

The Congress probably has power to pass legislation offering the right to voters for members of Congress and Presidential candidates, but it could not possibly extend the suffrage any further, and it will probably hesitate to go so far. The matter, as the President says, is clearly one for the states.

OUR ROLLING MILL.

The proposed Connelville rolling mill will be investigated by an intelligent and conservative committee of business men whose judgment can be relied upon.

In connection with the enterprise the suggestion is interesting that it may eventually involve furnaces. In the latter case coke is plenty and close at hand, but if our supply of natural gas should be cut off it would undoubtedly be found profitable for somebody to erect by-product ovens in this vicinity and furnish gas to the city as a by-product.

On the other hand, there is the nucleus of such a plant at Dunbar.

The Uniontown Standard opines that there is no doubt "the Republicans are inclined to make all the trouble they can this winter." Not half so much trouble as the Democratic organs tried to make in the campaign just ended.

The Hannels is being relieved of its surplus.

"Judging by the leanness of some of its advertising pages our contemporary's expansive policy is also a somewhat expensive one," says the Connelville News. Perhaps. But they were certainly interesting and instructive pages and much enjoyed by the readers of our 7,000 daily circulation.

The appeals from city assessments were comparatively few and apparently easy of adjustment.

The European war business is proving too much for this country. The steel mills have been compelled to devote their export orders and now some of the eastern railroads have been forced to refuse any more western consignments of export freight until their trucks are cleared of the present congestion.

The rock bank is never safe.

The Patriots rebelled against the Stamp Tax, but the patient citizen of the present day and generation is getting bravely used to it. It has undoubtedly become a tax in time of peace, something never known before.

Stewart township's watchdogs of the treasury cannot be depended upon to remain on the job, especially during the rabbit season.

The Protestant ministers of Connelville will draw lots next Sunday to see whose pulpit they will occupy. It's not quite orthodox, but Christianity is trying to forget the shell and revive the spirit.

The Thanksgiving coop must retire from the sidewalk. Sanitary considerations once more rise superior to animal treatment.

Connelville's night schools begin this winter term under the brightest auspices.

Big Business is making lively business for the postal employees, but it is welcome business. There are some forms of Big Business which the country looks upon with equanimity.

Germany and Great Britain are intimating that somebody is not telling the truth about the war. This is one time both of them are telling it.

The Russian Bear is getting ready to make a rush. He is used to the cold weather. He doesn't hibernate. When the temperature gets below zero he gets on his liveliest gallop.

The Serbian troops have been pretty nearly chased off the map at last accounts. The Balkan campaign is at all events a stirring one.

Workmen's Compensation is becoming a Paramount issue to employers, who await the state schedule of rates with interest.

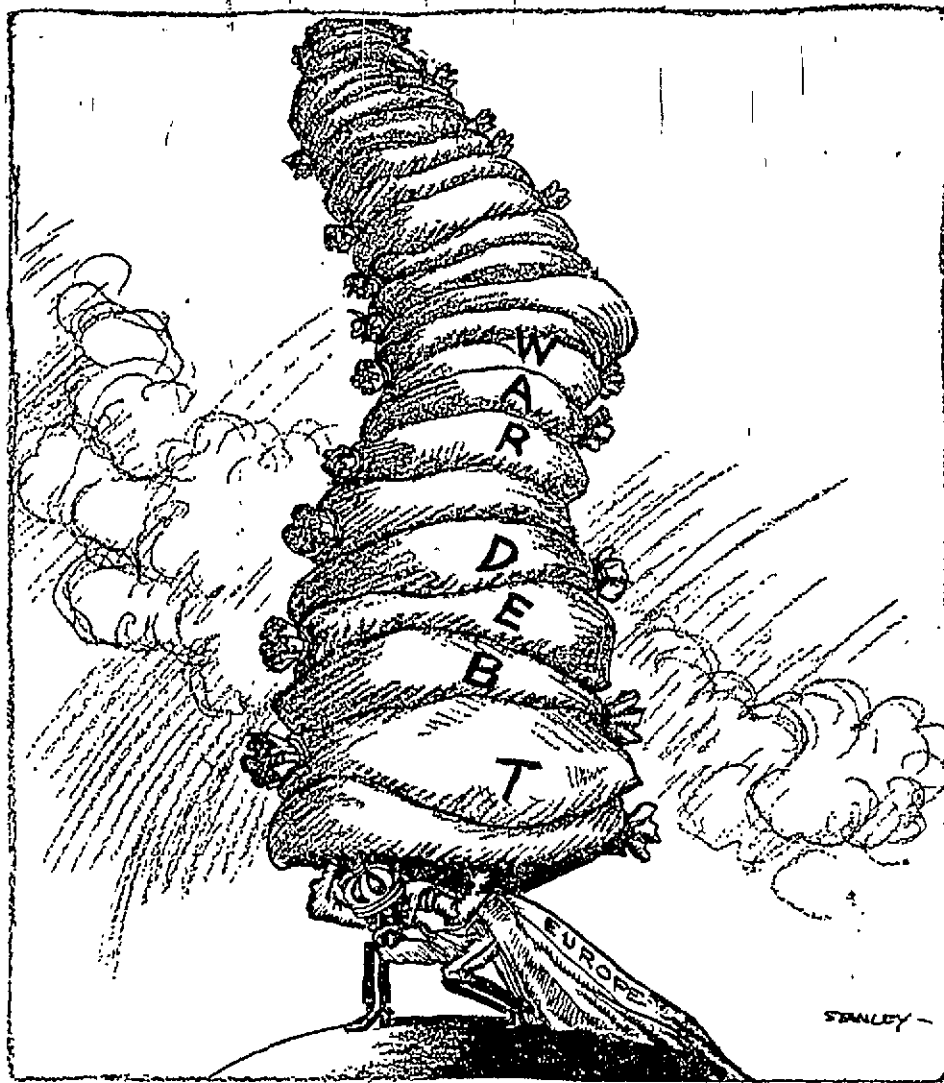

There promises to be no speculative wheat in Connelville much to the disgust of Yankee farmers.

THE LEANING TOWER OF EUROPE

Millinery

By GEORGE TITCH,
Author of "At Good Old Slaw."

Nobody knows why they call it millinery. The dictionary says millinery consists of articles made by milliners. The milliners say millinery is hats. In a dispute of this kind we should always believe the dictionary.

Millinery is the art of doing up 30 cents' worth of ribbon and straw with $10 worth of skill and selling the whole thing for $15. It is one of the three best known methods of getting money from a man; flattery and robbery being the other two. Millinery doesn't attack a man with the lasso, it seduces him. Then, however, it takes entire charge of the situation, and usually doesn't allow the other two methods a look in.

The prime object of millinery is to decorate women. Some women are pretty enough to become greatly beloved in a sunbonnet. Others require Paris hats a year to get by. Some hats are very beautiful indeed, but not given a chance. Their owners insist on going with them and spoiling the effect. It is not possible for a woman to obtain a hat that will hold all but her most beautiful feature. This is why some hats come clear down to the chin.

The millinery art is very complicated, because no woman wants a hat like any other hat that has ever been made. This necessitates the use of flowers, vegetables, fruit, ribbons, birds, cats, ostriches, insects, small animals, lizards, lingers, grubs, stumps, and other laborious claws, sharp teeth and automobile findings in trimming. It is also necessary to the front of the business that no hat of this year shall look like any hat of last year. This is avoided by changing the shape. We have already had large hats, small hats, flat hats, bulbous hats, leoparded hats, conical, warty, umbrella shaped and drunk-and-drooled hats. A few years ago the velvet nocking shaped like a horse's dinner bucket had a great run. Later the inverted hat tub was the sensation of the season; while this year the woman who does not possess a hat that isn't reminiscent of the lids that every New Englander's ancestors brought over with them in the Mayflower may as well consider herself socially extinct.

Millinery takes the place in many families of books and pictures and father's new overcoat. It is a tax levied by style and there is no chance of averting of the assessment. Nobody knows what next year's hats will be like, except like last year's hats worn than this year's hats. By that time we will have become accustomed to this year's hats, which is the worst thing about millinery. Just as you get used to it, it begins to hurt you in a new place.

A Scene from "The Birth of a Nation."

SOISSON TRIUMPH.

"THE PREHISTORIC PAST"—The happy comedy, "The Prehistoric Past," comes to the screen today in the wild form of a "The Prehistoric Past." It is an unusually funny farce and every scene is a scene of Grace Currier and Francis Ford are the stars in the nineteenth episode of the popular serial "The Broken Coin." It is an exciting play full of sensational scenes. "Homo, Thy Hand" is a two reel Powers drama featuring Sidney Ayres and Boris Fawn, that relates the manner in which a husband turns the tables on a wife who married him for his money, but doesn't let it. "Promises, Promises" is a Victor drama that tells the story of a fake friend, a faithful wife and a few promissory notes. "Father a Luckey Escape," is a Victor comedy with Billy Rhodes and Roy Gallagher in the cast. It is a bang-up comedy. Tomorrow Little Ella Hall in the five reel dramatic sunshine "Jewell." It is an exquisite photograph by Louis Weber and Philippe Smalley. A little girl named Jewell with a great big doll under her arm, a wealth of golden hair and a beautiful character, which radiated through her countenance, came to the home of Mr. Birmingham one day. She didn't possess a great deal outside of a little checkered dress as far as worldly goods were concerned, but she captivated every one with whom she came into contact. She softened the heart of a temperamental old grandfather, who had grown rather fastidious in his olden days, and she was a "bottle" converted her cousin Eileen to a right way of thinking and won the esteem and respect of all before she had been in her new home a week.

But why tell you any more of this wonderful child? To understand her you must see her in that remarkable real picture which has been completed by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Jewell is one of the greatest pictures ever made by any film concern, and it is a lesson of value to all of us. It makes you think and think hard. Don't fail to see it. It is worth your while.

ARCADIA THEATRE.

"ALWAYS IN THE WAY"—From the screen of the same name by Charles K. Harris is now a motion picture and comes to the Arcadia Theatre on Wednesday. The picture is more charming than the song. You can't afford to miss it.

A charming mystery story is "The Green Cloak," featuring that beautiful screen thespian Miss Irene Fenwick, scheduled as the chief attraction at the Arcadia Theatre tomorrow.

As usual Miss Fenwick is surrounded by a cast of sterling ex cellence including Little Edna Frank Belcher and Della Connor in addition to a number of other stage artists of reputation.

"The Green Cloak" speaks with adventure. The film story begins well.

along toward the middle of the plot and from a sensational start swings rapidly into the interesting business of unravelling the tangled skeins of destiny. Professor McAllister and his beautiful daughter Ruth return from a western trip. When Ruth meets her former sweetheart who confesses her love for him but tells him that it is impossible for them to think of marriage. Their chat is interrupted by the arrival of a mysterious young man whom Ruth introduces as "a friend" who met out west. A half hour later when the stranger, on plea of having letters to write, retires to the library, tragedy strikes forth. He is found dead with a clock tassel from one of Ruth's ornaments in his hand and a violin string wound tightly around his throat. Ruth tells the police that he was her husband and is promptly charged with his murder.

From this unusual start the story enters many complications. It is a feature from the George Kleine studio released through the Kalmie Edison Feature Service.

COLONIAL THEATRE.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION"—The magnitude of D. W. Griffith's feat in staging "The Birth of a Nation" is almost appalling—at least to the devotees of the older theatre. Where now are the little groups of actors, the pinhead scenery and the pretty properties of the so-called "legitimate" drama? By comparison with the new art, the "legitimate" is infinitely small. Griffith, in staging "The Birth of a Nation," used Nature for his background. 170 years of American history as his subject, 10,000 people as his actors and no less than 1,000 minutes of camera in the celebrated "rider of the Red, White and Blue."

After it was all completed he had an operatic score prepared and provided orchestral music worthy of Wagner. The motion picture goes to the screen with these marvelous things are done will be shown for the first time at the Colonial Theatre tonight when it opens a three days engagement with matinees on Monday and Wednesday.

THE GREEN CLOAK—KLEINE.

At The Arcade Tuesday.

Mabelle MacDonald as Claudine in "The Pink Lady."

Truck of a Collector.

Collectors are—in short, they are collectors. It was a dealer in antiques not long ago who was so possessed to be in search of new quarters. He inspect of an old time mansion fallen upon evil days. In one room was a carved marble mantel, an important piece and he opened negotiations to lease the room which contained it. The lease signed, he told the landlord that he desired a new mantel put in place of the old one. The landlord of course demurred.

If you don't want to put in a new mantelpiece I will at my own expense replace the collector.

That satisfied the landlord.

The marble mantelpiece was accordingly replaced by a cheap and showy horror and the carved antique carefully taken down and carted to the collector's shop, set up there to add to the advantage and eventually sold to some body who could afford to pay the very stiff price asked for it. As for the room with its new chimney decoration the collector calmly contrived to sublet it.—New York Post.

All the Latest Improvements.

There is a certain dear old lady who owns a little farm and takes a few boarders in summer.

Recently an anxious young mother who has been industriously delving into medical literature of late inquired of the old lady whether or not the milk that was served at her table was pasteurized.

Of course, was the old lady's indignant reply. Don't we keep all the cows we've got in the pasture all summer long?—Youth's Companion.

PETEY DINK—Who'd Ever Look for a 30c Meal From a Regular Millionaire?

By C. A. Voight.

"Ay, ay, sir," was the cheery response, as Johnsen started forward. In the mean time the erstwhile cabin-boy had not moved.

"What are you waiting for?" Wolf Larsen demanded.

"I didn't sign for boat-puller, sir," was the reply. "I signed for cabin-boy. An' I don't want no boat pullin' in mine."

"Pack up and go forward."

This time Wolf Larsen's command was thrillingly imperative. The boy glowered sullenly, but refused to move. Then came another stirring of Wolf Larsen's tremendous strength. It was utterly unexpected, and it was over and done with between the ticks of two seconds. He had sprung fully six feet across the deck and driven his fist into the other's stomach. At the same moment, as though I had been struck myself, I felt a sickening shock in the pit of my stomach. I instance this to show the sensitiveness of my nervous organization at the time, and how unused I was to spectacles of brutality. The cabin-boy—and he weighed 165 at the very least—crumpled up. He lifted into the air and struck the deck alongside the corpse on his head and shoulders, where he lay and writhed about in agony.

"Wolf!" Larsen asked of me, "have you made up your mind?"

I had glanced occasionally at the approaching schooner, and it was now almost abreast of us and not more than a couple of hundred yards away. It was a very trim and neat little craft. I could see a large, black sunburn on one of its sails, and I had seen pictures of pilot boats.

"What vessel is that?" I asked.

"The pilot-boat Lady Mine," Wolf Larsen answered grimly. "Got rid of her pilots and running into San Francisco. She'll be there in five or six hours with this wind."

"Will you please signal it, then, so that I may be put ashore?"

"Sorry, but I've lost the signal book overboard," he remarked, and the group of hunters grinned.

I debated for a moment, looking him squarely in the eyes. I had seen the frightful treatment of the cabin-boy, and knew that I should very probably receive the same, if not worse. As I said, I debated with myself, and then I did what I consider the bravest act of my life. I ran to the side, waving my arms and shouting:

"Lady Mine ahoy! Take me ashore! A thousand dollars if you take me ashore!"

I waited, watching two men who stood by the wheel, one of them steering. The other was lifting a megaphone to his lips. I did not turn my head, though I expected every moment a killing blow from the human brute behind me. At last, after what seemed centuries, unable longer to stand the strain, I looked around. He had not moved. He was standing in the same position, awaiting easily to the roll of the ship and lighting a fresh cigar.

"What is the matter? Anything wrong?"

This was the cry from the Lady Mine.

"Yes!" I shouted, at the top of my lungs. "Life or death! One thousand dollars if you take me ashore!"

"Too much 'Frisco tangloof for the health of my crew!" Wolf Larsen shouted after. "This one"—indicating me with his thumb—"fancies sea serpents and monkeys just now!"

"The man on the Lady Mine laughed back through the megaphone. The pilot-boat plunged past.

"Give him hell for me!" came a final cry, and the two men waved their arms in farewell.

When I turned around, a moment later, I saw the cabin-boy staggering to his feet. His face was ghastly white, twitching with suppressed pain. He looked very sick.

"Well, Leach, are you going forward?" Wolf Larsen asked.

"Yes, sir," came the answer of a spirit cowed.

"And you?" I was asked.

"I'll give you a thousand—" I began, but was interrupted.

"Stop that! Are you going to take up your duties as cabin-boy? Or do I have to take you in hand?"

What was I to do? To be brutally beaten, to be killed perhaps, would not help my cause. I looked steadily into the cruel, gray eyes. One may see the soul stir in some men's eyes, but his were black and cold and gray as the sea itself.

"Well?"

"Yes," I said.

"Say 'Yes, sir.'"

"Yes, sir," I corrected.

"What is your name?"

"Humphrey, sir; Humphrey Van Weiden."

"That'll do. Go to the cook and learn your duties as I passed into a state of involuntary servitude to Wolf Larsen. He was stronger than I, that was all. But it was very unusual at the time. It is no less unusual now that I look back upon it. It will always be to me a monstrous, inconceivable thing, a horrible nightmare."

"Hold on, don't go yet."

I stopped obediently in my walk toward the galley.

"Johnsen, call all hands. Now that we've everything cleaned up, we'll cult for me from the fact that the Ghost, under close reefs (terms such as those I did not learn till later), was plunging through what Mr. Mugridge called an "ovilla" sou'wester." At half past five, under his directions, I set the table in the cabin, with rough-weather trays in place, and then carried the tea and cooked food down from the galley.

"Look sharp or you'll get doused," was Mr. Mugridge's parting injunction, as I left the galley with a big teapot in one hand, and in the hollow of the other arm several loaves of fresh baked bread. One of the hunters, a tall, loosely jointed chap named Henderson, was going aft at the time from the storeroom (the name the hunters facetiously gave their midships sleeping quarters), to the cabin. Wolf Larsen was on the poop, smoking his everlasting cigar.

"Who comes. Sling yer 'look!' the cook cried.

I stopped, for I did not know what was coming, and saw the galley door slide shut with a bang. Then I saw Henderson leaping like a madman for the main rigging, up which he shot, on the inside, till he was many feet higher than my head. Also I saw a great wave, curling and foaming, poured far above the rail. I was directly under it. My mind did not work quickly, everything was so new and strange. I grasped that I was in danger, but that was all I stood still, in trepidation. Then Wolf Larsen shouted from the poop:

"Grab hold something, you—you flump!"

But it was too late. I sprang toward the rigging, to which I might have clung, and was met by the descending wall of water. What happened after that was very confusing. I was beneath the water, suffocating and drowning. Several times I collided against hard objects, once striking my right knee a terrible blow. Then the flood seemed suddenly to subside, and I was breathing the cool air again. I had been swept against the galley and around the storeroom companionway from the weather side into the lee scuppers. The pain from my hurt knee was agonizing. But the cook was after me, shouting through the lee galley door:

"Ere, you! Don't tyke all night about it! Who's the pot? Lost overboard? Severe case, bloody well right if yer neck was broke!"

I managed to struggle to my feet. The great teapot was still in my hand. I limped to the galley and handed it to him. But he was consuming with indignation, real or feigned.

"Gawd blame me if you ain't a slob. You're good for anythin'! Cawn't even carry a bit of tea aft without losin' it. Now I'll 'ave to boil some more."

Two things I had acquired by my accident—an injured knee that went undressed and from which I suffered for weary months, and the name of "Hump," which Wolf Larsen had called me from the poop. Thereafter, for and aft, I was known by no other name, until the term became a part of my thought processes and I identified it with myself, thought of myself as Hump, as though Hump were I and not always I.

It was no easy task, waiting on the cabin table, where sat Wolf Larsen, Johnsen and the six hunters. The cabin was small, to begin with, and to move around, as I was compelled to, was not made easier by the schooner's violent pitching and wallowing. But what struck me most forcibly was the total lack of sympathy on the part of the men whom I served. I could feel my knee through my clothes, swelling and aching, and I was sick and faint from the pain of it. I could catch glimpses of my face, white and ghastly, distorted with pain, in the cabin mirror. All the men must have seen my condition, but not one spoke a word of notice of me, till I was almost grateful to Wolf Larsen, later on, for washing the dishes, when he said:

"Don't let a little thing like that bother you. You'll get used to such things in time. It may cripple you some, but all the same you'll be learning to walk."

"That's what you call a paradox, isn't it?" he asked.

He nodded, pleased when I nodded my head with the customary "Yes, sir."

"I suppose you know a bit about literary things? Th' Good. I'll have some talks with you sometime."

And then, taking no further account of me, he turned his back and went up on deck.

That night, when I had finished an endless amount of work, I was sent to sleep in the storeroom, where I made up a spare bunk. I was glad to get out of the detestable presence of the cook and to be off my feet. To my surprise, my clothes had dried on me and there seemed no indication of catching cold, either from the lost soaking or from the prolonged soaking from the fouling of the Martineer. Under ordinary circumstances, for all that I had undergone, I should have been fit for bed and a trained nurse.

But my knee was bothering me terribly. As well as I could make out, the kneesep seemed turned up on edge in the midst of the swelling. As I sat in my bunk examining it (the six hunters were all in the storeroom, smoking and talking in loud voices), Henderson took a passing glance at it.

"Looks nasty," he commented. "Tie a rag around it and it'll be all right."

Like the savage, the attitude of these men was typical in great things, childish in little things. I remember, later in the voyage, seeing Kerfoot, another of the hunters, lose an anger by having it smashed to a jelly, and he did not even murmur or change his expression on his face. Yet I have seen the same man, time and again, return to the most outrageous passion over a trifle.

He was doing it now, vociferating, bellowing, waving his arms, and cursing like a fiend, and all because of a disagreement with another hunter as to whether a seal pup knew instinctively how to swim.

For the most part, the remaining four hunters leaned on the table or lay in their bunks and left the discussion to the two antagonists.

And they smoked, incessantly smoked, using a coarse, cheap and offensive smelling tobacco. The air was thick and murky with the smoke of it, and this, combined with the violent movement of the ship as she struggled through the storm, would surely have made me seasick, had I been a victim to that malady. As it was, it made me quite squeamish, though this nausea might have been due to the pain of my leg and exhaustion.

As I lay there thinking, I naturally dwelt upon myself and my situation. It was unparalleled, undreamed of, that I, Humphrey Van Weiden, a scholar and a dilettante, if you please in things artistic and literary, should be lying here on a bedding of sea-weeds in a schooner. Cabin-boy! I had never done any hard manual labor, or scullion labor, in my life. I had lived a placid, uneventful, sedentary existence all my days—the life of a scholar and a recluse on an assured and comfortable income. Violent life and athletic sports had never appealed to me. I had always been a bookworm; no my sisters and father had called me during my childhood. I had gone camping with the party almost at its start and returned to the comforts and conveniences of a roof. And here I was with dreary and endless visits before

"Seven years ago when our first child was born I was left miserable. I doctored with two physicians without any relief. I then went to see one of the best doctors in Williamsport.
